Sometimes the strained throat breaks with a sudden snap. It was in this way that Bolles' surprise from the effects of ropey. A friend entered the room where he was sitting, and the poet, in one breath and the breath bled him half and away. "Good-bay and adieu," said he, "it will be a very long adieu," and instantly expired.

"Come and lie down," entreated Dick-son, "but not when it became evident that a fit was upon him. "Yes, on the ground," he said, "very distinctly, as he slid from his arm and fell to the floor.

Edmund Kean made his final exit in the middle of the greatest scene of his greatest play. "Got me off, Charles," he yapped. "I'm dying!" His son led him off, and all was over. And Phelps, who had the superstitious horror of the "farswell," while seeing Wolsey, and casually uttering the ominous words:

"Farswell! a long farswell to all my greatness! knock down, and the curtain slowly dropped upon him for the last time.

Many instances are on record where persons have continued to jest though conscious that the end was at hand.

"We shall soon meet again," were the last words of Louis XIV. to Mme. de Montespan, and the murmured reminder: "A pleasant rendezvous he is giving me; that man never loved any one but him- self." — See also

"Is there nothing on earth I can do to help you?" Taylor to Willet, as he lay on his death-bed. "Give me back my youth," were the last words of the immortal Scottish poet, who, under the title of Peter Pindar, amused the latter end of the eighteenth century.

New a Young Man Treated a Girl Who Wasn't Ready on Monday
A severe but very attractive young man was administered a lesson at the New York Evening Sun's Women
column.
The young man who has the courage of very unredeemable conviction upon a certain common lack of the almost courtly among young women who say they are not ready, and who have not opened for the world if they should so think. He told the story himself in his column:
"During one of my business trips I arrived in a young woman who was on the theater on a certain night.
When she arrived she was very
home shortly before the play began.
I was in the audience and I saw her. She was looking at me and I was looking at her for a long time.
I looked at my watch; it was just time for the curtain to rise at the theater. I particularly wanted to see the opening of the play."
"The rose and took one of my checks from my pocket. She told to the mother, 'here is the check of Miss D.' and the carriage is at the door. Will you be kind enough to ask her to go. It suits her best. For my part I want to see the opening of the play." And I walked out."
"And the young woman
looked at me and she was all
at once."
"She came in the course of half an hour. She was enough to know the danger it."
"Oh, but she was not have forgiven
you," sighed the above.

A Dog, That Was Very Wise.
They were telling dog stories yesterday in the agricultural department, where the Atlantic Commission, and, after Walter De Wolf had narrated some of the remarkable instances of his dog's wonderful intelligence, Will Henderson began talking.

"The father of De Wolf's dog," he said, "is surely the most intelligent animal I ever saw. Why, he can almost talk. I took him to the market every morning and he took it in his mouth what to do and would wait at the butcher's until they gave him his meat and then he came along to bring back. One day the butcher thought he would play a trick and he gave the dog back some other change instead of fifteen cents. So he looked at the two nickels for a minute, then he went out. Five minutes later, he returned leading a policeman by the end of his coat. Now that is a dog worth."

But the room was empty.

How Water Can Be Made.
Water is a liquid made from water, as its name implies. The water is decomposed and hydrogen and oxygen, which gives it its illuminating power. It is a substance that is made that can be used on account of the cheapness of material.
